Season Has Brilliant Finale By MILDRED MARSHALL KOONCE.

HREE more days of gayety before the quietus which descends most conclusively on the social frivolities of the Capital. The White House reception on Friday, which, with the sole exception of the similar function given to the pan-Americans at the beginning of winter, was the most brilliant event of official society, practically brought to a close the festivities of the present season. But in the intervening days, smart society is making the most of the last hours of grace, and hospitalities will be the thought of the moment until the very dawn which ushers in Ash Wednesday. Then will follow forty days of fasting and penitence carried out in the spirit, if not in the actual letter, before the resumption of festivities in the "petit seson" of early spring.

The termination of gayeties on Shrove Tuesday will undoubtedly seem more abrupt, and the ensuing weeks more deadly dull, than in any previous Lenten period which the Capital has experienced for several years, measuring brilliant season by brilliant season, and days of sackcloth by former penitential weeks. The Capital has outdone its own best hopes for social prestige this winter and the hiatus in the smart affairs of society will stand in far greater contrast than did the same season last year when the first imminence of the war cloud had thrown a somber pall over the smallest function and quite discouraged all evidence of gavety.

The Capital has no Mardi Gras to wind up, with its gay revelry, the brilliance of the completed season, but the social program for the next few days does not lack for numerous and varied form of entertainment, which will be in the nature of a brilliant finale. Aside from a host of individual parties, chief among them being the dinner for the President and Mrs. Wilson, with the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Lane as hosts on Tuesday evening, there will be the performance of "The Gypsy Prince" at Rauscher's Monday and Tuesday evenings for the benefit of the Junior League of the City of Washington. This particular entertainment brings together the debutantes and members of the younger set and has the active support and interest of the most fashionable contingent of Capital society.

On Tuesday evening also, the Sons of Confederate Veterans will hold their annual Mardi Gras ball, so popular among the Southern folk in the official and residential sets. Always a charming affair and deriving patronage from exceedingly interesting folk, the ball this season promises unusual success and is insured unwonted brilliance by the prominence of those who are actively interested in the program.

The week will find many vacancies in the smart world. The Vice President and Mrs. Marshall left yesterday for a Western trip of a week or ten days, during which they will visit Chicago and spend a short time in Indianapolis. The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. McAdoo, who recently abandoned a Southern jaunt, are planning a trip through South America, expecting to leave Washington on March 10. Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, whose sojourn at the Willard was marked by much brilliant entertaining, has also departed, and, with Mrs. Stephen Osborne, will sail March 15 on the steamer Persia for Yokohama, Japan, where they will join Miss Eliza Scidmore and make a
